

The Road to Productivity Is a Two-Way Street

Wondering "what's happened to all the good employees"?...
or "what's happened to all the good employers"?

Come to the February 18
Breakfast Forum
to hear Jill Shuller, Principal of J.P. Shuller Consulting. Find out what is happening
to organizations and hear new ideas on how to begin improving productivity from both sides.

Many companies are frustrated with the increased cost of doing business. Organizations have difficulty staying focused on their plans or getting employees to cooperate or put customers first. Day-to-day operations are filled with too many distractions, resistance to change, lack of initiative or poor communications. As a result, organizations have reported annual costs of thousands to millions of dollars in lost productivity, sales and customers, as well as increased turnover, rework, waste and labor costs. On the other hand, there are employees frustrated with what they perceive to be ridiculous demands on their time and expertise. They find themselves unrecognized and disappointed at performance review time. They've lost any sense of security or feeling of loyalty from the company. This age-old disparity within organizations has become too costly to continue.
